

It should be obvious that if the local broadcast media was meeting the need there would be no need for XM to serve this type of market. It is not being served.

I recently moved from Minneapolis and heard the difference that the change of ownership of WCCO made the change was not good, the station has really lost listeners through the new owners of a big broadcast company.

Let the market place prevail and the best survive.

The FCC does not and should not have to fight the battle of a large company having competition from a small operation (XM).

If customers like a service they will use it. If they don't like it they will not use it and it will die its own natural death (if nobody listens then the service will disappear).
